What is Social Prescribing?

Social prescribing is a way to link medical care to (typically) non-clinical, locally delivered support services.

Our Project

The Social Prescribing Project will bring together partners from across Scotland and Northern Ireland. The largest coordinated project of its kind, it will synthesise learning from across two regions. Over 16,000 people will co-create a social prescription and engage in at least one of the many interventions delivered by our network of experienced community-led health improvement organisations.

Candidates must have at least a relevant third level qualification in a health/social sciences/business/management subject plus three years project management/co-ordination experience in health, education, youth or community development including line-management experience in any discipline.

Or

Five years project management/co-ordination experience in health, education, youth or community development including line-management experience in any discipline.

A full application pack can be requested by contacting Susan Harkin : susan@bbhealthforum.org.

Closing date for applications is 5pm on Tuesday 26 June 2018.

Interviews will be held in Belfast, Northern Ireland on Thursday 5th July.
